The following graphs report parental perception of child’s weight status (either “somewhat” or “very overweight”) by their child’s actual weight status (normal, overweight, or obese). In general, parents are more likely to rate their child as overweight if their child is obese (73%) than if their child is overweight (34%).